

Lava Rainbows 3

#280

Hawai'i Volcanoes National Park

Fine Art Photography by Bryan Lowry

A double rainbow over a small stream of lava

The Big Island of Hawaii

This was a hike that never would have happened if I hadn't done a favor for a friend and take their nephew out to the active lava flows.

The flow was still part way up the pali around the 400' elevation. It was a nice 2 hour hike that started around midnight.

The flows leading edge had some nice small streams going down the pali.

Just after sunrise the usual trade wind showers moved in and this allowed a great double rainbow to form. They were both very intense for about 1-2 minutes.

I had my Nikon 10.5 mm lens ready to go. This gave me the needed time to capture this image.

If you look closely there's a partial 3rd rainbow visible on the upper right side. Its easily seen on my computer.

I view the park as a living art museum and nature is the artist
And I am the lucky photographer there to capture its images.

My motto is "Live to shoot another day"

Please read and obey all posted signs and warnings. Stay out of closed areas.
They are closed for a reason. Nothing you might see in a closed area is worth your life.

Bryan Lowry has been photographing the island of Hawai'i since 1991. His favorite subjects are the active lava flows in Hawai'i Volcanoes National Park.

2010 Copyright © Bryan Lowry / lavapix.com All rights reserved

Non-poster version available on metal #280 at Lavapix.com